$10,000 JEWELS STOLEN ON BRIDGE

Salesman Missed Them After Fight Had Driven Him from Car.

If the men who walked off a Brook-lyn "L" car Saturday evening with a tox containing $10,000 month of jewelry will return the jewels Heathcote & Co., of No. 7 Maiden lane, will pay them a A young salesman of the firm was taking the jewelry, consisting of several dozen articles, ranging from diamond rings and stick pins to diamond studded watches and brooches, to Brooklyn purchasers.

It was at the rush hour and the sales. man was accompanied by his wife and nan was accompanied by his ware and we-year-old son. They had managed to set seats in the second car of a sbuttle rain when a fight began. The salesman told the police the men who fought ooked like 'longshoremen and he did not believe they were accomplices of my one with designs on his jewelry.

When he first came into the car he said placed the box, about eighteen inches square, between his feet, but when the fight started he stood up to recent his wife from the car. His different he stood and he assisted her from the car at the Brooklyn terminal without thinking of the box. No seems that he reached the station platform than he remembered and ran back but the train had already started. He should to the guard that he had left a package in the car.

That's all right," he says the guard spilled. "Be on the other platform when he swing back and you'll get it." He hurried to the other platform, but when the train returned the box was sone. Some of the station hands said they saw a young man in a light overcast caraying the box out of the car. He made no attempt to conceal it, they says and so no attempt no conceal it, they are and so no attempt no was attracted to him. This is the only clue the plates have. two-year-old son. Friends and relatives of Pietro Chirico, one of the wealthiest and most prominent Italians in New York, who suddenly disappeared from his home in Brooklyn last Wednesday, believe that he was robbed of $700 or $300 and then he was robbed of $700 or $300 and then murdered.

Chirico owned property valued at $50-000, including five saloons, three in Manhattan, one in Brooklyn and another in Jersey City. He also owns two big flat-buildings in Brooklyn and another in Jersey City. He also owns two big flat-buildings in Brooklyn Nicola Cauarolli, brother-in-law of the missing man, said to-day that Chirico might have been mirdered by members of the black Hand Society.

"My brother-in-law always carried a large amount of money with him," said chanarelli, "and this was generally known by the Italians who visited his various saloons. He left his home at Sixty-fifth street and New Utrecht avenue, Brooklyn, at I o'cock on Wednesday afternoon, telling his wife that he was going to Manhattan. That is the last that has been seen or heard from him by his familty. Mrs. Chirico is now ill in bed, suffering from nervous prostration. She, too, believes her husband has been murdered. There are a freat many Italians who were very jealous of Chirico's good fortune, although no threats had ever been made against his life. A general alarm has been sent out by the police and every enfort is being made to locate him."

Clirico has done an extensive banking business at his saloon, at No. 130 Baxter street. Most of the Italians in the neighborhood have their money on deposit in his bank. Just before he disappeared Chirico had suffered from mervezs trouble and some of his friends say it might have affected his brain and caused him to awanded one and every more than the saloon at No. 130 Baxter street. Mutual Bank President Tired of Troubles Over David Stevenson Estate.

James McClenahan, President of the Mutual Bank, it was said to-day, will esign next week as a trustee of the David Stevenson estate. This is declared to be the first move in an attempt to settle the suits in the Supreme Court n which charges of fraud are made. Mr. Stevenson died in 1892, leaving an estate of $3,000,000.

After the resignation of Mr. McClena-han other questions at issue, bearing on the charges, all of which are denied by Mr. McClenahan, will be presented.

When young David Stevenson inherited his father's fortune he was only fifteen years of age. He is now twenty-nine. Three years ago he eloped with Miss Mary Greenough, of Philadelphia. She is suing for a separation.

"By the use of 'Esperanto' every author would be able to write for the whole world." -Recent public statement by Prof. Ostwald, of Leipsic.

The World Almanac is to-day to the hundreds of thousands of seekers after encyclopedic information what "Esperanto" will be to the world. In French there are more than 2,000 verbal terminations. In "Esperanto" there are 12. In an ordinary set of encyclopedias there are twenty or more volumes, and the cost is $30 to $50, and even more, according to binding. The World Almanac is a neat little volume of about 700 pages, fits the pocket, and costs but 25 cents. It gives accurate and concise information on almost every conceivable subject and meets the daily demands of every man or woman in whatever walk of life. 35 cents
